1. The hierarchal site map is the most appropriate for the JavaJam website because linear and random is not optimal. Linear doesn't work because for example, to reach to jobs, you'd need to go through music and the menu—it is unnecessary. Then random has no direction, and every page, should be able to reach the menu for the customers, or to reach the menu, you may have to do some searching. hierarchal works the best because, you can reach all the pages from the mainpage. To navigate to other pages, you just have to go back to the main page—where everything is.

Good practices:

- Navigation links are clear and consistent
- Colour usage is consistent; in addition, they have sufficient contrast between the text and background
- Img elements uses the alt attribute

Practices to be improved:

- A responsive page layout could be implemented for smartphone and tablet
- Specifically implement for browser compatibility
- Use navigation aids prior to implementation

There are lots of ways to improve the website, as this is a website for a coffee shop with a difficult location, animations or 3D objects could be implemented in the main page with aesthetically pleasing graphics of the shop to visually invite customers
